Keeping an eye out for ephemera

EAST Tips for Reviewing Your Retention Allocations

Prior to receiving your retention allocation EAST staff will have removed material found in the EAST ephemera category on the EAST website. However, our filters don't catch everything and some out of scope material will likely make it on libraries' retention proposals. Before agreeing to retention commitments we encourage you to carefully review your retention proposals and remove titles that are clearly out of scope for EAST retention, such as: theses, textbooks, test prep, guides, federal government documents, and sometimes juvenile literature, which while not always out of scope is often material that libraries are unwilling to commit to retain. Note that libraries may opt to retain some of these types of materials, but are not required to do so by EAST.

We recognize that reviewing large list of titles can be daunting, so here are some tips for identifying out of scope material:

- Sort the retention proposal spreadsheet(s) alphabetically by title:
 - Search for terms that are typically included in the title of textbooks, guides, and manuals. Please note that the following list is not exhaustive. And by searching the above terms you may find other out of scope material with similar titles listed in the vicinity e.g. information technology next to information security. Also, just because a title may include these terms doesn't mean it's automatically out of scope for EAST retention.
