What is EAST?

The Eastern Academic Scholars' Trust is a shared print initiative whose mission is to create a collective collection that secures print monographs and serials in support of teaching, learning, and research. As part of this mission, EAST has created a decentralized repository system, which means that each of its retention partner member libraries agrees to store and make accessible the titles assigned during the collection analysis process. This practice allows member libraries the opportunity to deselect print items knowing that they are maintained at other institutions and trusting that they will be freely available for borrowing when needed by patrons. Libraries that are EAST members are required to retain, loan, and replace items that are designated for retention at their library. The following list gives important information about retained titles:

- Monograph, journal and serial titles are retained for 15 years (currently through June 30, 2031).
- The EAST retention commitment is reflected in the 583 MARC Field of bib or holdings record.
- EAST Retention commitments can be transferred or reallocated; procedures for doing so are outlined in the Retention FAQ, under the Retention & Access menu on eastlibraries.org
- Member libraries can determine if another institution retains a particular title by searching the database available on the eastlibraries.org homepage. Additional data about the full EAST retained collection is available via OCLC, and the Gold Rush and PAPR databases. Contact the Project Team with any questions.

Why is my institution an EAST member?

Each EAST member joined for a variety of reasons, including wanting to safeguard and provide access to the scholarly record while recognizing that no single institution can do so by itself. EAST allows member libraries to make collection management decisions by taking into account other EAST members' willingness to retain and loan specific titles. Membership in EAST also indicates that an institution is interested in participating and contributing to the broader conversation around issues of shared print, that is taking place at state, regional, national, and international levels.

How does membership in EAST affect my institution?

To preserve the safety net of retentions, EAST members are required to maintain updated retentions information, including metadata, and to participate in the lending network via inter-library loan.

Where can I go if I have questions about EAST?

The EAST website, eastlibraries.org, is your go-to place to find answers. The site provides comprehensive and dynamic FAQs and Best Practices on topics including retention commitments and Interlibrary Loan. It contains a listing of each library's EAST Voting Member and Operational Contact. For additional guidance, contact the EAST Project Team directly.

EAST and the Technical Services Unit

Technical services staff are responsible for ensuring that EAST retained print materials are discoverable in their institution's ILS, registered in OCLC and PAPR for serials and journals, and that staff are aware of the responsibilities associated with retained items so as to avoid accidental weeding or loss. For example, technical services staff should update catalog records with EAST retention information, remediate ILS errors found through the collection analysis work, and provide input to the EAST membership on best practices for recording retention information for both monographs and serials. To this end, technical services staff from EAST member institutions developed the 583 Best Practices¹, which provides a blueprint for all libraries to follow when recording retentions in their local catalogs. Technical services staff should also be involved in recording retentions in WorldCat or other EAST approved systems, and occasionally provide EAST with updated records.

As part of this maintenance, the EAST Project Team issues reallocation calls, during which member libraries are asked to send in lists of items they can no longer commit to retain. Libraries can also request reallocation at any time via a form on the EAST website. Reasons for reallocating titles to other EAST member libraries are varied and include bibliographic errors (the bibliographic record does not match what is on the shelf), the inability to replace a lost item, and similar issues. More information about the scope of the collective collection and the reallocation process can be found on the EAST website². More information on retained items and reallocation requests can be found in the EAST Retentions FAQ.

Access to GreenGlass® and Gold Rush® Collection Analysis Tools

Libraries that have a current contract with OCLC for GreenGlass can use it for collection analysis and for searching EAST retentions. All EAST libraries have access to the Gold Rush collection comparison tool, which contains data for all EAST retentions. For login information to Gold Rush please contact the EAST Project Team. EAST retention commitments are registered with OCLC and thus visible in several OCLC products. Retained serials and journals are also visible in the Print Archives Preservation Registry (PAPR). PAPR also provides a free lightweight on demand serials collection comparison tool.

How do I become personally involved in EAST?

EAST periodically looks for volunteers to serve on its various committees and working groups. The best way to find out about these opportunities is to sign up for our emails by using the Contact Us form on the EAST website to request to be added to the EAST.Members list-serv.
